Lisa Sturman, interim principal at Radcliff Elementary School, has been selected as the school's principal.

"Ms. Sturman will do an absolutely fantastic job in this role," Hardin County Schools Superintendent Teresa Morgan said in a news release. "She knows the students, families and staff and has strong relationships with them all."

Sturman began her career as an instructional assistant in Washington state in the early 1990s. She spent time as a long-term substitute teacher and started a full-time teaching career in Kentucky in 2001 as a special education teacher for Meade County Schools.

She then worked as the lone special education teacher at West Point Independent School from 2004 to 2011. Sturman transitioned to North Middle School to begin work as a special needs teacher and became one of the school's assistant principals in 2018.

Her career also includes roles as gifted and talented coordinator, Title I coordinator, interventionist, roles in special education administration, English/language arts department chair and team leader.

She earned all of her degrees and certifications from Western Kentucky University.

“I’m excited about this opportunity,” Ms. Sturman said in the release. “Radcliff Elementary is a tremendous school. The students work hard and the staff is dedicated to student growth. We are going to continue to work hard with everyone to ensure students flourish with the educational opportunities available to them.”
