QPR (Suicide Awareness and Prevention)

Question, Persuade, and Refer training aids us in recognizing the signs of someone who is contemplating suicide, AND how to have that conversation to help prevent self-destruction. Attendees will learn what behaviors, words, and clues are red flags, and how to ask that scary question “Are you thinking about killing yourself?” Then, we will discuss how to refer that person for further help. Join Betsy Pierce, CTC Staff Therapist, Feb. 6, from 1-2 p.m. in the DSU 2113 for this informative session.

To register, e-mail vicki.armstrong@wku.edu.

By Dr. Karl Laves

Few things pull me into a Lewis Black-like rage than hearing people express deep sorrow and regret about being lonely or alone on Valentine’s Day. I can think of few situations that better illustrate the idea “we have met the enemy and he is us.” In the words of David Powlison, “Feeling sorry for yourself is one of the strongest, most addictive narcotics known to man. It feels so good to feel so bad. Self-pity arises so easily, seems so plausible, and proves so hard to shake off.”

Folks, I have sympathy and empathy for people’s pain, but I also think we set ourselves up for a great deal of the pain we experience in life. So what if so many hundreds of years ago a bunch of people decided to dedicate a day to love, or whatever the origin of Valentine’s Day is. Some say it was a liturgical celebration, a remembrance of a martyr. Today it is another mainstream American McHoliday where you dump a ton of cash at Heart-Mart in yet another socially validated celebration of shared narcissism. Too obscure a reference? Erik Erikson wrote about how many adults based their romantic relationships on a quid pro quo notion. It isn’t that I love you so much as it is I love that you love me.

Get the drift here; I am on a rant and I may not be making sense. The divorce rate in America is ridiculous, the prevalence of cheating and domestic violence is epidemic and yet people want to get all pitiful on one day of the year because they are alone. What is it about Feb. 14 that makes one’s life so miserable? Is it the alignment of the planets? Does the inner core of the earth shift and send shockwaves only felt by the broken hearted? C’mon, were you any less miserable on Feb. 13, or April 10, or July 7? In the manner of a true cognitive-behavioral therapist, which I am not, let me ask “what are you choosing to believe about Feb. 14 that requires you to despise yourself?”

How many of those couples, so deeply and publically in love on the 14th, will be broken up by March? How many of them are cheating on each other already, hence the need to bribe one another? Are you that vain or needy that you would rather have a pretend relationship instead of a real one? Can you imagine that there really are people who would rather be alone than be in a bad relationship?

You don’t have to beat yourself up for being alone. Love, done well, takes time and you sure don’t want to rush it. Forgive me for this comparison; love is like money. If you get a whole lot quickly, you probably did something hinky to get it. Let’s get some perspective here my friends. On one day of the year you are going to mope around and feel horrible because you don’t have a special someone? Because on the same day there are people walking around wishing they had a home, a meal, a safe place to play….there are people wishing they were not poor, hungry, or abused. On the day you think you have to be sad because you didn’t get a box of chocolates there are other people wishing they had a few more days with their family before the cancer ends their lives.

Yes, it can be unpleasant to be alone or lonely. But it is not a permanent condition. And it certainly is not a condition that magically becomes worse on Feb. 14. Unless you say it does…but that is just you saying it…..nobody else is thinking it. Well, maybe some people are thinking it … ,those narcissistic, thin-skinned, vain and entitled people I mentioned before.

So, here are my revolutionary thoughts for Valentine’s Day. Don’t have someone special? Good!!! Send Valentines to people who are hurting for other reasons. Make some goody bags and drop them off at the hospital, local school, or police station. Take yourself out for an excellent dinner and movie. Better yet, find three or four fellow wonderful humans who are not currently dating, etc., and all go together. The origin of Valentine’s Day, according to some, is a celebration of a person who suffered for others, who gave time and energy to those around him. This Valentine’s Day why don’t you honor the true meaning and share the love and don’t get so wrapped up in the material Kardashian bull hockey of chocolates and roses.

This Feb. 14, send a valentine to someone who really deserves it……you!

Fun facts about Valentine’s Day

• The ancient Romans celebrated the Feast of Lupercalia on Feb. 14 in honor of Juno, the queen of the Roman gods and goddesses. Juno was also the goddess of women and marriage.

• Many believe the X symbol became synonymous with the kiss in medieval times. People who couldn’t write their names signed in front of a witness with an X. The X was then kissed to show their sincerity.

• In the Middle Ages, young men and women drew names from a bowl to see who would be their Valentine. They would wear this name pinned onto their sleeves for one week for everyone to see. This was the origin of the expression “to wear your heart on your sleeve.”

• In 1537, England’s King Henry VII officially declared Feb. 14 the holiday of St. Valentine’s Day.

• Physicians of the 1800s commonly advised their patients to eat chocolate to calm their pining for lost love.

• Richard Cadbury produced the first box of chocolates for Valentine’s Day in the late 1800s.

More than 35 million heart-shaped boxes of chocolate will be sold for Valentine’s Day. Over $1 billion worth of chocolate is purchased for Valentine’s Day in the U.S.

• Men buy 73 percent of all flowers for Valentine’s Day, while women buy only 27 percent.
