- 1.10 Course description: Pedagogical theories and the practical considerations of teaching college literature.
- 1.11 Course equivalency: NA

2. Rationale:

- 2.1 Reason for developing the proposed course: This course is part of the revision of our MA in English that is designed to make the program more attractive and practical for our graduates. The course will prepare graduates to teach literature at the college level and give students seeking PhDs an advantage as they pursue admission to graduate school and possible teaching assistantships. With a combined emphasis on a literary topic and pedagogy, the course will help make our program more “student-and-learning-centered” and provide “value in a holistic learning experience through high standards for student achievement and conduct” (WKU Statement of Purpose). A number of English graduate programs around the country have added similar courses to their curricula: University of Kentucky (ENG 611 Literature Teaching Seminar), George Mason University (ENG 610 Proseminar in Teaching the Reading of Literature), Texas A&M-Commerce (ENG 775 Teaching Literature in College), and University of South Florida (LAE6389 Practice Teaching Literature).
- 2.2 Relationship of the proposed course to other courses at WKU: WKU does not offer any courses on teaching literature at the college level. MGE 475 Teaching Language Arts and SEC 475 are methods courses designed to help secondary school instructors teach literature. ENG 476 Critical Approaches to Literature in the Secondary Curriculum provides exposure and context for literature in the secondary classroom. ENG 510 Graduate Rhetoric and Writing addresses theoretical and practical implications of teaching composition. ENG 516 will be a companion course to ENG510.

3. Discussion of proposed course:

3.1 Schedule type: L

3.2 Learning Outcomes:

By the end of the course, students will be able to

- Explain and analyze the recent history of literature teaching in American colleges and universities;
- Explain and analyze a variety of pedagogical approaches to teaching literature;
- Articulate a historically and theoretically informed philosophy for teaching literature in colleges and universities;
- Develop a syllabus and suite of assignments for a general education literature course;
- Develop a syllabus and suite assignments for a topics in literature course;
- Plan and develop class plans for literature classes;
- Teach a lesson in an introductory literature course; and
- Determine how a variety of pedagogical choices lead to different types of learning.

3.3 Content outline: Students will begin the course with a discussion of students' personal experiences in and rationales for teaching literature in the college classroom. The course will return to ideas from this foundational discussion frequently but gradually expand the context to help students see how their experiences have been influenced by the practices of teaching literature in American universities since the nineteenth century and how the teaching of literature has evolved over time. The course will also consider how theory has influenced the teaching of literature and explore appropriate ways to incorporate literary theories into different types of literature classes. The course will also have a strong practical focus with pragmatic outcomes. Alongside historical, theoretical, and pedagogical conversations, students will formulate their own philosophies of teaching literature and develop syllabi, assignments, classroom activities, and evaluation strategies for general education literature courses and for a more specialized upper-level literature course of their choosing. The course will also be grounded in specific literary texts. Students will read poetry, short stories, novels, and drama in the course and use pedagogy as a primary lens to analyze the texts and prepare micro-lessons on the literary texts for classmates. Students will observe several literature teachers at WKU, work with a mentor to teach a lesson in an introductory literature class, and respond to written work produced by real students. Throughout the course, student will be encouraged to consider the importance and value of becoming reflective practitioners who regularly improve and revise their methods.

3.4 Student expectations and requirements: Students will be evaluated on activities such as journal work, syllabi construction, assignment construction, a research paper, micro-teaching activities, short literary analysis essays, discussion work, book reviews, and a final exam.

- 3.5 Tentative texts and course materials:
 Bronte, Charlotte. Jane Eyre: Bedford Critical Edition. 2nd Edition. New York, 2014. (or another regularly taught novel)
 Damrosch, David, et al. The Longman Anthology of British Literature. Volumes 1 & 2. New York: Longman, 2011. (or another commonly used anthology for upper-level courses)
 Mays, Kelly. Norton Portable Introduction to Literature. New York: Norton, 2016. (or another commonly used general anthology)
 Graff, Gerald. Professing Literature. Chicago; U Chicago P, 2007.
 Showalter, Elaine. Teaching Literature. Boston: Wiley & Sons, 2009.
- Faculty teaching the course may choose to have a “special topic” for the literature they use as long as long as they maintain a focus on the preparing of students to teach general education literature courses.

4. Budget implications:

- 4.1 Proposed method of staffing: The course will be a required course for MA students and an option for MFA students. It will be offered every spring and rotated among current faculty. Since we are opening up our MA program, staffing will not be an issue, and we won’t require additional staff to offer it.
 4.2 Special equipment, materials, or library resources needed: NA

5. Term for implementation: Fall 2017

4. Rationale: The current MA in English program limits students' choices once they have graduated. The new curriculum promises more post-degree flexibility. A small number of our graduates have entered Ph.D. programs in literature, and that's the strength of the current (and longstanding) model. A larger number have entered Ph.D. programs in Rhetoric and Composition or taught English in high schools, community colleges, and TESL classrooms. The new core will better serve our students by preparing them for teaching at various levels. English departments need faculty members with a diverse range of skills, including literature, composition, and language. Instructors need to know how to teach literature, writing of various kinds, and culture. We will produce MA-graduates who have skills in several areas of English studies, as reflected in the revised core, with the possibility of some specialization in one of those areas developed from the electives. Students will be able to develop informal concentrations of study, but they won't be as constrained as they are with the current curriculum. We believe the new program will be more attractive to potential students.

4. Rationale:

- Add 3-hour literature elective to the program: When the program was created, the CPE made a suggestion to add 3-hours to the program to make it a 48-hour program comparable to many other MFA programs in the nation. The English Department agreed to add a 3-hour literature elective at that moment and the Provost and Regents approved the program with the addition. The proposal never went back through the curriculum process to get faculty approval, so we are bringing it back for review.
- Add ENG403G, ENG474G, ENG475G as workshop options with ENG501: Adding these three courses to the workshop options and allowing students to take them twice (see course revisions) will give more flexibility to the program and help with staffing.
- Delete ENG403G, ENG404G, ENG407G, ENG408G, ENG501G, ENG502G from Composition/Rhetoric Secondary Concentration: These courses were mistakenly included in the original proposal. They are electives to our old Rhetoric/Composition program in the MA program.
- Add ENG 410G, ENG412G, ENG415G, and ENG597 to Composition/Rhetoric Secondary Concentration: These courses were mistakenly left out of the original MFA proposal. They are central courses for the Rhetoric/Composition concentration.

1. Proposed course:

- 1.1 Course prefix and number: SLP 560
- 1.2 Course title: Medical Speech-Language Pathology
- 1.3 Abbreviated course title: Medical SLP
- 1.4 Credit hours: 3
- 1.5 Variable credit (yes or no): No
- 1.6 Repeatable (yes or no) for total of ___ hours: No
- 1.7 Grade type: Standard Letter Grade
- 1.8 Prerequisites: SLP 514
- 1.9 Corequisites: None
- 1.10 Course description:

Current issues encountered in the medical environment in preparation for an externship and career in a healthcare setting. Collaborative roles, ethics, documentation, communication, advanced diagnostics (MBS), impact of various medical conditions on communication, cognition, and swallowing.
- 1.11 Course equivalency: None

2. Rationale:

- 2.1 Reason for developing the proposed course:

National accreditation requires that graduate students in Speech Language Pathology (SLP) gain knowledge and skills related to assessment and intervention in the medical setting. The complexity and breadth of conditions within the scope of practice of the Speech Language Pathologist continues to grow. Graduate students in SLP are required to complete a medical placement and this course will provide knowledge and skills required for success in this setting. Many of the skills learned in this course will also easily transfer to other employment settings (such as collaborative team approach and ethics). A high number of our graduate students enter medical settings for their first post-graduate employment and this course will offer them practical and relevant knowledge to support their success in the field. An offering of this content under SLP 572 Contemporary Issues received high enrollment (30+) in Summer 2016.

- 2.2 Relationship of the proposed course to other courses at WKU: WKU offers an NURS 508 Advanced Issues in Professional Nursing, which serves a similar purpose but does not address speech-language pathology scope of practice.

3. Discussion of proposed course:

3.1 Schedule type: L

3.2 Learning Outcomes:

Upon completion of this course, students will be able to:

- Describe the role of the SLP on interdisciplinary teams in a variety of medical settings;
- Discuss various departments, professionals, and their collaborative roles with speech-language pathologists;
- Interpret common medical terms and abbreviations;
- Summarize the impact of tracheostomies, ventilators, and head and neck cancer on communication and swallowing abilities.
- Analyze and interpret Modified Barium Swallow Studies;
- Discuss common ethical dilemmas related to the medical field;
- Demonstrate ability to plan a treatment day with consideration of documentation and reimbursement requirements;
- Conduct a thorough medical chart review to extract information about insurance, medical status and acuity, vital signs, medications, and recent diagnostic tests to summarize a patient's chart and plan for an efficient and effective comprehensive assessment;

3.3 Content outline:

- The American Speech Language Hearing Association's (ASHA) Collaborative role of SLP in medical setting
- Communication with team
- Settings & continuum of care
- Medical terminology
- Trach & Vent
- Head & Neck Cancer
- Laryngectomy
- Modified Barium Swallow Studies
- Fiberoptic Endoscopic Evaluation of Swallowing
- NICU/Pediatric Feeding
- Ethics
- Billing/Coding/Documentation
- Palliative Care
- Drug effects, pharmacology

3.4 Student expectations and requirements:

- Quizzes, presentations, discussion, training videos

3.5 Tentative texts and course materials:

- Golper, Lee Ann C. (2010). Medical Speech-Language Pathology. (3rd ed). Delmar Cengage Learning. ISBN: 978-1-4283-4057-2
- MBSImp Training: <https://www.mbsimp.com/> or equivalent CEU training on a medical SLP topic.

4. Budget implications:

- 4.1 Proposed method of staffing: Current faculty
- 4.2 Special equipment, materials, or library resources needed: None

5. Term for implementation: Summer 2017

21. Proposed course:

- 1.1 Course prefix and number: SLP 575
- 1.2 Course title: The Speech Language Pathologist's Role in Literacy Practice
- 1.3 Abbreviated course title: SLP Role in Literacy
- 1.4 Credit hours: 3.0
- 1.5 Variable credit: no
- 1.6 Repeatable: no
- 1.7 Grade type: X standard letter grade pass/fail in progress (IP)
- 1.8 Prerequisites: none
- 1.9 Corequisites: none
- 1.10 Course description: An examination of how difficulties involving phonological awareness, memory, retrieval, language demands of textbooks, academic talk, and curriculum may stress a student's capabilities at different ages and grade levels and learn how speech-language pathologists can assess and provide intervention.
- 1.11 Course Equivalency: none

22. Rationale

- 2.1 Reason for developing the proposed course: The American Speech Language Hearing Association (ASHA) clearly outlines the expectation of SLPs in the area of literacy stating "It is the position of ASHA that SLPs play a critical and direct role in the development of literacy for children and adolescents with communication disorders, including those with severe or multiple disabilities. SLPs also make a contribution to the literacy efforts of a school district or community on behalf of other children and adolescents. These roles are implemented in collaboration with others who have expertise in the development of written language and vary with settings and experience of those involved." The school setting represents the largest work setting for speech-language pathologists. As such, a course dedicated to teaching graduate students how to fulfill their role in literacy intervention within that setting will be beneficial.

Graduate students in SLP are required to complete a public school placement and this course will better prepare them for success in this setting. Skills learned in this course will also easily transfer to other settings (i.e. hospitals, skilling nursing facilities, etc.) in areas such as digital and health literacy.

- 2.2 Relationship of the proposed course to other courses offered at WKU: WKU offers an MAE in Literacy Education which includes many literacy-based courses; however, these courses do not specifically address speech-language pathology services or comprehensively cover the role SLPs are expected to fill in literacy intervention.

23. Description of proposed course

23.1 Schedule type: Lecture

23.2 Learning outcomes:

- Describe pertinent background information and the major etiologies of disorders in children and adults
- Assess the impact of language and literacy impairment and adverse effects on the learning process
- Plan, implement, evaluate and modify literacy intervention strategies
- Analyze issues pertinent to service delivery such as cultural diversity, behavior management, and collaboration
- Develop strategies for the prevention of literacy disability
- Identify and critically discuss knowledge and skills in professional issues

23.3 Content outline:

- ASHA's expectations of SLPs in the area of literacy intervention
- Models of spoken and written language comprehension
- Assessment and instruction for phonemic awareness and word recognition skills in school-aged children
- Assessment and instruction for text and reading comprehension skills in school-aged children
- Assessment and instruction for spelling skills in school-aged children
- Developing knowledge and skills for writing

23.4 Student expectations and requirements: discussion board posts, learning assessments, case studies, projects, and therapeutic product.

23.5 Tentative text(s)

Kamhi, A. G., Catts, H. W., & Kamhi, A. G. (2012). Language and reading disabilities. Boston: Pearson.

24. Budget implications:

24.1 Proposed method of staffing: Current employed faculty will cover this course.

24.2 Special equipment, materials, or library resources needed: No special equipment or materials are needed for this course. Current library resources are sufficient.

25. Term of Implementation: Summer 2017

26. Dates of review/approvals:

4. Rationale: Students are confused about choosing elective courses. The range is currently 7-9 credit hours for elective courses. Nearly all of our graduate classes are 3 credit hours making the 7 credit hour nearly impossible to achieve. We propose requiring CHEM 516, which is a literature review writing course. CHEM 516 and CHEM 588 will now become two credit hour courses each. This addition, together with a 2 course elective requirement, would make it straightforward for the student to sign up for and fulfill the 30 hour degree requirement.

College, Department: Ogden College of Science and Engineering, Physics

Contact Person: Ali Oguz Er, ali.er@wku.edu, 5-6202

1. Proposed course:

- 1.1 Course prefix (subject area) and number: PHYS 565
- 1.2 Course title: OPTICAL DETECTION METHODS OF BIOLOGICAL AND CHEMICAL AGENTS
- 1.3 Abbreviated course title: OPTICAL DETECTION METHODS
(maximum of 30 characters or spaces)
- 1.4 Credit hours: 3
- 1.5 Variable credit (yes or no): no
- 1.6 Repeatable (yes or no) for total of ___ hours: no
- 1.7 Grade type: Standard Letter Grading
- 1.8 Prerequisites: PHYS 560 or consent of instructor
- 1.9 Corequisites: none
- 1.10 Course description: Explore the application of optical detection technologies to detect and characterize chemical and biological agents. Optical methods such as laser induced breakdown spectroscopy (LIBS), light detection and ranging (LIDAR), coherent anti-stokes Raman spectroscopy, photoacoustic, and photothermal imaging. Apply theoretical principles to real-world examples.
- 1.11 Course equivalency: none

2. Rationale:

- 2.1 Reason for developing the proposed course: Detecting and diagnosing high-priority biological and chemical threat agents is of the utmost importance to domestic security. Students will learn how to characterize and develop optical detection methods that can be used to analyze samples, so that appropriate measures for public safety and health can be taken. This course will enhance the Master of Homeland Security Science degree content
- 2.2 Relationship of the proposed course to other courses at WKU: There is an optics (PHYS 441) course in the physics curriculum. However, even taken for graduate credit (PHYS 441G), the content is largely basic knowledge about beam propagation, geometrical optics, and interference. In the proposed Optical Detection Methods course, students will focus more on the application of optical principles to detection of biological and chemical agents. In the proposed course students are expected to gain ancillary knowledge in biology, chemistry and solid state physics in order to develop the intuitive capability to discover and research potential applications of optics to these fields.

3. Discussion of proposed course:

3.1 Schedule type: weekly

3.2 Learning Outcomes: After completing this course, students will be able to:

- Describe the physics underlying optical detection methods
- Describe the interaction between light and materials
- Calculate properties of various types of laser and the propagation of laser beams
- Evaluate the use and appropriateness of lasers for some common detection applications
- Define and explain various chemical and biological agents and rationally estimate appropriate technique(s) for their detection
- Apply principles of physics, chemistry and biology to threat detection in homeland security

3.3 Content outline:

FOUNDATION

- Introduction
- Optics and lasers
- Laser-Material Interaction (thermal & optical)
- Basics of laser spectroscopic technology and instrumentation

LASER SPECTROSCOPIC TECHNIQUES

- Laser Induced Breakdown Spectroscopy (LIBS), Light Detection And Ranging (LIDAR)
- Infrared Spectroscopy
- Raman Spectroscopy

OTHER DETECTION TECHNIQUES THAT USE LIGHT

- Photoacoustic sensing techniques
- Photothermal imaging
- Laser-induced fluorescence
- Modulated laser spectroscopy (for ultrasensitive trace vapor detection)

PROJECTS

REVIEW

3.4 Student expectations and requirements: There will be two midterm examinations and one final exam. Each student will also write a research paper on a subject chosen in consultation with the course instructor. In that paper the student will research an application of optical detection, write a report and make a presentation to the class at the end of the semester.

3.5 Tentative texts and course materials: In most cases, instructor lecture notes will form the core course content. However, for supplementary information, the following reference books will be suggested: Laser-Based Optical Detection of Explosives by P.

Pellegrino, CRC Press; Optical Detection Theory for Laser Applications by G. Osche, Wiley; Detection of Chemical, Biological, Radiological and Nuclear Agents for the Prevention of Terrorism by J. Banoub, Springer.

4. Budget implications:

- 4.2 Proposed method of staffing: to be taught by an existing faculty
- 4.3 Special equipment, materials, or library resources needed: none
